Orbit Shot Is Planned For Thursday

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — Space officials said today the weather prospects are grim but that they will go ahead with preparations to launch astronaut John H. Glenn Jr. into orbit Thursday morning.

The schedule as now set calls for Glenn to make one, two or three flights around the earth in space depending on when he gets off in the period between 7:30 a.m. EST and 12:30 p.m.

At last report the pre-shot checkout of the big Atlas booster and Glenn's "Friendship 7" Mercury space cabin were proceeding smoothly. Glenn apparently continued to be in top form.

But the weather forecast at 9:40 a.m. EST today was not reassuring. Over the launch area here a cloud cover was expected to move in Thursday from the northeast at 3,000 feet.

Said the forecasters: "Mostly cloudy—uncertain."

Because officials want to photograph the critical early moments of the launch as a safety move to make doubly certain they know exactly how it is going, they will not fire if more than 35 to 40 per cent of the sky is covered by clouds.

The forecast was hardly more favorable for the recovery area in the Atlantic where Glenn would come down if his trip were ended after one orbit.

Rough seas east of Bermuda were expected to extend as far south as the one-orbit recovery area, the forecast said. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) said they may not be able to launch for safety's sake by launch time.

Several Attend Shakespeare Play In Paris, Tennessee

The Mutual Concert Association of Paris, Tennessee presented the National Players last night in a crowd pleasing performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by William Shakespeare.

A number of Murray members of the Civic Music Association were in attendance at the performance, being admitted on their local membership.

The rendition of the play was enthusiastically received by the large crowd, which was especially appreciative of the portrayal of Bottom by Bernard McNamee, Jr.

The three-hour play was moved swiftly due originally to the adverse active, ingenious portrayal, and talented renditions of the various characters by the participants.

Included among the many Murrayans attending was the dramatic actress of Mrs. C. S. Lowry at College High School.

Titan Puts On Great Show In Florida

By LEON BURNETT
United Press International

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) — A Titan I missile tested much of the southeast United States to a steady aerial display Monday night in closing out a 47-shot test series.

Roaring 600 miles up and 5,000 miles down the Atlantic test range at dusk, it created a huge halo of light in the sky, along with other displays of brightness and color.

Hundreds of spectators on the beach south of the Atlantic missile testing center gazed with pleased surprise as the missile's engines produced one unusual effect after another.

So clear was the sky, so brilliant the performance, that persons along the southeast coast from Miami to Virginia were entertained, awed—even downright frightened—by it.

A man in Wilmington, N. C., said "it was one of the most beautiful sights I have ever seen."

A woman there said she thought it was "a Russian bomb."

Another man: "I haven't been drinking, but nothing ever affected me like this."

At Bristol, Tenn.—Va., 250 miles from the East Coast, at least one caller reported a glow in the sky and inquired if there had been a missile firing.

After the huge halo faded, it left behind a serpentine mass of man-made clouds so high above the earth that the sun streaked them with hues ranging from pink to green to deepest purple.

The activity was only incidental. The Titan I performed it while hurling a dummy warhead 5,000 miles down the Atlantic, and testing instruments for use in more advanced Titans.

It was the Cape Canaveral finale for the Titan I, and brought the score in the test series to 34 successes, 9 partial successes and only one failure.

Its bigger brother, Titan II, is expected to make its test debut here in March. This one will be able to hurl a package of destruction equal to 10 million tons of TNT halfway around the world.

Mississippi River Ice Jam Breaking Up; Damage Seen

CAIRO, Ill. (UPI) — The worst Mississippi River ice jam in 44 years was breaking up into tree-splintering floes today.

There were reports of a new ice gorge forming in Dog Tooth Bend, where the river makes an "S" turn 15 miles above Cairo. But skippers of tow boats stranded for two weeks hoped to be able to force their lines of laden barges through the narrow, shallow, ice-crusted portion of the waterway.

The ice jam began breaking up with a grinding grumble Monday. Its 15-foot-high floes climbed river banks and chewed through wooden pilings and trees along dikes and levees. Authorities feared damage to pilings would be extensive.

More barges moored at Cairo were torn loose by the flooding Ohio River Monday but tow boats managed to recapture them before they got out of the harbor area. Over the weekend 150 barges broke loose. Three of them sank and others were found as far as 70 miles down the Mississippi.

The runaway barges were being reassembled into tows today at Island No. 2, 17 miles downstream on the Mississippi.

Efforts to salvage the three sunken barges remained stymied by the flooding Ohio, which was expected to crest at 417 feet, some 2 feet above flood stage, Thursday. There was no flooding in Cairo, which is protected by a 65-foot levee. However, some lowland areas on the Kentucky side of the Ohio were inundated.

Coast Guardsmen who flew over the Mississippi River ice jam Monday said a 10-mile gorge above Cairo was separated by open water from the Dog Tooth Bend ice jam. Over the weekend the ice jam stretched unbroken for 25 miles up-river.

Stubblefield And Bass Will Introduce Bill In Congress

WASHINGTON — Legislation creating the proposed between-the-rivers national recreation area on the Kentucky-Tennessee border is being drafted by the Interior Department and will be introduced in about two weeks, Rep. Ross Bass of Tennessee said Saturday.

Bass said that he and Rep. Frank Stubblefield, D-Ky., will sponsor the legislation. He predicted it will be approved in the current session of Congress.

The proposed park lies between Kentucky Lake and Lake Barkley. It will embrace approximately 167,000 acres of land bounded by 285 miles of shoreline formed by the two lakes.

The combined waters of the two lakes will form one of the largest recreationally adapted artificial water resources to be found anywhere in the United States.

Bass and Stubblefield, in whose districts the area is located, met with representatives of the Interior Department earlier last week to discuss the legislation. The Interior Department requested the bill be designed to overcome the objections of some residents of the park.

The legislation will be drawn so as to contain language to protect the property owners of Stewart County, Tenn., and Lyon and Trigg Counties, Ky., within the area to the extent that they be allowed to retain a lifetime estate in the property for purposes of residence and agriculture pursuits after which the property will be dedicated to the Park Service," Bass explained.

"One other assurance to be included in the bill provides that adequate provisions be made for the maintenance of state and county roads now serving the area, particularly to the community of Model."

Model, a community of approximately 150 persons in Stewart County, will be maintained as a private community, inside the boundaries of the park, Bass said.

Bass said county officials of the three counties involved will be invited to Washington as soon as the legislation has been drafted.

"We want their approval of a final draft before the bill is introduced," Bass said.

The Tennessee congressman said that even though the bill will protect residents from eviction during their lifetime, he thought that most families of the area would be glad to leave.

ENFORCE MONROE DOCTRINE

WE have said many times that we don't believe we can co-exist with International Communism without repealing or violating our own laws, and changing many of our customs, or actually without changing our constitution.

Our Secretary of State is meeting with delegates from all American Republics in Uruguay this week. He is offering a Kennedy "Program for Progress" which is buttered and sugared with twenty billion dollars which belongs to American taxpayers to induce our sister Republics to impose sanctions on the Fidel Castro regime in Cuba. It stands in utter and total violation of the Monroe Doctrine against shipping arms or ammunition to any nation in this hemisphere.

Our delegate has failed in getting fourteen of our sister Republics to vote sanctions against Castro. He now seems willing to compromise in order to get some sort of resolution for our twenty billion dollars which we can consider as a victory.

Contrast this with action taken by the late Woodrow Wilson when the Huerta regime in Mexico accepted arms from Germany, or when two divisions of Marines occupied Cuba in 1917 on the eve of declaration of war and it will be less difficult to understand what it takes to impress the people of Latin America.

If we can't, or won't, enforce the Monroe Doctrine what can we accomplish with twenty billion dollars in foreign aid? Nehru of India could probably give us an accurate answer to that question. He says all we need to do is understand his problems. Maybe that's all we need to do with Castro.

INVESTIGATE STATE DEPARTMENT

EVER since former Secretary of State Dean Acheson, back in 1948, revealed a sudden flash of temper and exclaimed, "I cannot turn my back on Alger Hiss," his trusted assistant who was credited as being chief author of the United Nations charter granting the Soviet Union three votes, plus veto power, millions of Americans have had their confidence shaken in this important branch of our government which controls our relations with foreign nations. Hiss was convicted as a Communist.

President John F. Kennedy revealed the same sort of anger in his press conference Wednesday when a woman reporter for Texas newspapers asked a question with regards to two officials in the State Department who, she claimed, "are well-known security risks."

President Kennedy momentarily lost control of himself in defending the two officials, informing the reporter he had only recently examined the record of one, and had been informed by Secretary Dean Rusk that the other had been cleared as being thoroughly trustworthy. He expressed his implicit confidence in Secretary Rusk's judgment.

What the reporter wanted to know was why these state department officials were put on a security task force and if they have anything to do with editing speeches delivered by officers in the army, navy, or air force dealing with the threat of International Communism.

Investigations in the past have revealed Communist agents, not only in this country but in most others, have infiltrated labor unions, defense plants, military organizations, colleges and universities, both private and tax-supported, the clergy, civil rights organizations, and practically every other walk of life. Why, then, is it so stupid to suspect Communist sympathizers could worm their way into the State Department? And why is there such vehemence in condemning conservative organizations, such as the Birch Society, and such care taken to follow Lenin's co-existence formula for Communist world conquest?

We wish to express our admiration for Sarah McLendon in asking President Kennedy about the security background of Mr. William Arthur Wieland and J. Clayton Miller who were recently placed on what she says is a State Department "black force" to reorganize the security department, and we nominate her for a 1962 Pulitzer prize.

Mr. Kennedy accuses her of damaging the character of these two men by questioning their loyalty. We don't believe it's possible to damage a person's character by a Senate investigation. It may ruin reputations, but never character.

MERCURY SPACECRAFT RECOVERIES SAFEGUARDED BY FLOTATION BAGS

The danger of sea loss of Project Mercury spacecraft which may fill with water after helicopter arrives on the recovery scene has been virtually eliminated through use of new flotation equipment.

Marine Corps helicopters assigned to spacecraft recoveries are now equipped with a rapidly-inflatable flotation bag which is hooked to the space vehicle's lifting assembly simultaneously with the attachment of the lift cable. The flotation gear and its carbon dioxide inflation system were designed and engineered by the Aero-Space Division of Walter Kidde & Company, Inc., Belleville, N.J.

This extra protection during recoveries will prevent a recurrence of events which led to the loss of the second manned Mercury spacecraft. When the spacecraft accidentally opened shortly after the vehicle hit the water, Astronaut Virgil Grisson was able to emerge safely but the vehicle began shipping water. The recovery helicopter, which had attached a lifting line to the flooding spacecraft, developed engine trouble while attempting to lift the water-filled spacecraft out of the sea and crewmen were forced to release the lift lines.

The new Kidde system provides for the flotation gear to be coupled with the lifting cable from the helicopter. Should the hooked spacecraft prove difficult to retrieve because of rough seas or accidental shipping of water, the flotation device is actuated from the helicopter. The bag inflates in several seconds and keeps the spacecraft afloat for subsequent recovery.

In practice, release of the spacecraft pulls the previously attached flotation bag away from the helicopter. As the gear separates from the aircraft, a static cord actuates a CO2 gas cylinder which inflates the float bag. When the bag is floating with the spacecraft, suspended beneath it, another hook-up ring on the uppermost section of the bag is in position for a follow-on ship to retrieve the spacecraft.

The lines on the float-bag are fashioned so that as the ship makes the second attempt at recovery, the hook-on ring and nylon harness lines pull away from the float bag and take the weight of the spacecraft directly.

The flotation bag has a buoyancy of more than 2,500 pounds, more than adequate to support the spacecraft which weighs considerably less when submerged in the water. The harness equipment attached to the bag is designed to withstand the loads imposed by lifting clear the water-filled spacecraft.

The Kidde equipment was supplied for the Manned Spacecraft Center of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration at Langley Air Force Base, Va., and will be utilized by the Department of Defense forces supporting the Project.

Eastern Coach Paul McBrayer Quits; 16 Years And 214 Wins

RICHMOND, Ky. (UP) — Eastern Kentucky had a new acting basketball coach today, following the surprise mid-season resignation of head coach Paul S. McBrayer late Monday.

McBrayer's resignation after 16 years, which he said was necessitated by declining health, took college officials, team members and fans alike by surprise.

Dr. Robert R. Martin, Eastern president, immediately named Jim Baechtold, assistant coach and a former player under McBrayer, as acting coach to finish out the current season.

Eastern Kentucky, a member of the Ohio Valley Conference, currently has a 5-3 record and next meets arch-rival Morehead (Ky.) Thursday in a Conference tilt.

Giving his poor health as his reason for leaving, McBrayer said, "There is no other reason for my resigning. Coaching has been my whole life and I regret giving it up more than anything I have ever done."

He told Martin, "I regret having to do this, but I feel it is the only thing for me to do."

McBrayer, 52, a widower, plans to leave this week for Florida to rest indefinitely. He said he will return here in the spring to fulfill his contract.

Baechtold, who played for the Baltimore Bullets at the conclusion of his college career, later was bought by the New York Knickerbockers. A five-year veteran on the Maroon coaching staff, he is considered to have the inside track as McBrayer's successor.

Martin said that McBrayer's replacement would not be chosen immediately.

McBrayer came to Eastern in 1946 after serving nine years on the staff of Coach Adolph Rupp at the University of Kentucky.

He helped raise Eastern, then a nonentity among the Blue Grass State's basketball teams, to national prominence.

McBrayer - coached teams have won 214 games and lost 141 during his tenure.

They also have brought home five OVC trophies and reached the NCAA Tournament twice.

Plant Popular Petunias

Plant petunias in a pot, along a path, around a patio, or hanging baskets, but are just as effective to fill large flower beds with their blooms. This is because petunias grow to different heights, form plants of varying sizes and have flowers that may be small, medium or large, single or Petunia, Multiflora Comanche double and of one or two colors. Exact characteristics depend on which type of petunia you select.

There are so many types that it takes an expert to know them all and, sometimes, to tell one from another. Just to give you an idea, there are dwarf petunias like variety Can Can with enormous blooms of red, red-orange and white. Dwarf petunias are the ones to plant in pots or edging a path. Plants are mound-like, low growing and may grow 2 feet across. There are also balcony petunias which have long branches laden with bloom that will hang down from window boxes or hanging baskets, but are just as effective to fill large flower beds with their blooms. White Wonder, Blue Wonder, and Black Prince, a very dark red-flowered variety, are all of this type.

Multiflora petunias are also excellent for bedding but plants of this type are compact, bushy and about 15 inches high. They produce, as the name "multiflora" implies, a multitude of fair-sized flowers that literally cover the plants.

Plum Dandy, a fuchsia-plum flowered hybrid petunia, is new for '62 in this class. So is Dawn Satin, a soft, light pink. Such favorites as Sugar Plum, with orchid pink flowers, pencilled and shaped rich purple; Linda, a pure, salmon-pink and Comanche, with deep scarlet-red blooms, are multiflora too.

The grandiflora petunias are different again. Plants branch from the base, flower freely, are of compact habit, but grow a foot and a half tall. Flowers may measure 4 inches across. Pink Cheeks blooms extra-early for petunias in this class; has blended pink blooms with white throats, shading to bluish-pink edges. Blue Jeans hasn't as large flowers as some grandiflora, but makes up for size by vibrant blue color.

Double petunias have so many petals, they look like camellias. Pink Riches is a new double petunia this year, colored as its name says. Cherry Tart is another newcomer bearing huge quantities of small, double, bright, creamy-pink flowers which are variegated with white.

With this background, you'll be able to choose the best petunia for the way in which you intend to use it in your garden.

THE 'ONE TOO MANY'—This is what the Svend-Jacques Heim hat collection in Paris calls a cocktail hat, and maybe it should be called the "One Too Many." It is of carrot-colored straw, woven into a calot that billows into a bun.
